PRESS COMMENT

THINKS HARTNESS WILL MAKE GOOD

(Editor: Hindley in Rutland Herald) And right here, let me say that I dunno whether that Hartness industrial expansion plan is so crazy as some of us thought.

If under the constitution of Vermont we can spend a quarter of a million, more or less, for the promotion of agriculture, what to top us from promoting industry?

Pretty hard to draw the line, and some good lawyers say the state can promote education all it desires and increase the taxpaying value of property all it sees fit.

As to showing a Vermont Legislature why it shouldn't be from the interior of Missouri, I've noticed two or three little things about Hartness:

When he wanted a lather to make a certain part he needed, he invented and built the lather.

When he needed three speeds without a pulley-shift, he invented a differential gear—probably antedating the automobile "shift," when he took up astronomy, he built his own observatory in his own observatory and timed its movement by his own mathematical scale.

When he wanted absolute solar time he invented and built a sundial that made all similar instruments look numbers.

When he decided to run for governor he needed publicity and he built his own publicity plan, wrote his bulletins, found his own way to reach the people and—arrived.

No one can tell what a Louisiana will do, but guess this from me as a citizen—Jim Hartness will have a plan for industrial expansion by the time the Legislature meets and it will be a plan that will at least command respect.

Barnet Town History Already Half Printed

The Barnet History has been delayed keeping improving the book, and being giving the families of the town renewed opportunities for supplementing their records and photographs. The first half of the book is in print, but additions can still be made to the family histories. Births, marriages and deaths since the records were sent in can be added, and if there are any Barnet families who have not transferred their dates from the family Bible to this record book, they still have the chance. Every such story included in the book will be of inestimable value to different members of the family here in town, and especially to those who live in other places. There is no charge whatever for the insertion of these records, and the Committee will be glad to help in their preparation where desired.

Illustrations will be inserted at the actual cost. Present prices are in the neighborhood of $5 for quarter page cuts, $8 for half page and $12 for full page illustrations. Family portraits, residences and business enterprises are all welcome. Pictures of buildings should be taken before the leaves fall. The committee will help in this work. They have already secured pictures of all the churches, cemeteries, cimetaries, depots and occupied school houses.

There is also a wide open opportunity for any who are interested in the enterprise to cooperate with the committee in other ways, to make the book still more perfect, and to hasten its appearance.

Sec. Farren Tells of Work With Boys of the Sea

helpfulness. The sailor comes ashore in a strange port after a tempestuous voyage, needing a place where real friends will minister to his needs and will send him to sea again a stronger and better man. For ninety-two years this society, with its Bethels in Boston and Vineyard Haven, has furnished the sea-faring men havens of refuge. There they get their mail, write their letters, bank their earnings, sleep, bathe, rest, read, play games and attend free concerts and religious services. These men when sick, unfortunate or shipwrecked, look to this society for assistance and receive it.

To meet the urgent needs of all these activities more funds are necessary and the collection of the evening will go to provide additional facilities in the dormitory.

Mr. Farren was for five years previous to taking on this work pastor of the Congregational church at London and was actively identified with church and charitable work in this vicinity. He has given frequent addresses here and is always sure of an interested audience.

Harley-Davidson, Victor of the Year's Two Long-Distance Classics

The second annual World's Championship 200-Mile Road Race held at Marion, Indiana, September 6th, 1920, was captured the second time by the Harley-Davidson.

Ray Weishaar mounted on a Harley-Davidson made the distance in the remarkable time of 2 hours, 48 minutes and 37.12 seconds, breaking the world's record, set last year by a Harley-Davidson, by more than 17 minutes. The winning Harley-Davidson's average speed was 73.63 miles per hour.

This victory gives both 1920 long distance motorcycle classics to the Harley-Davidson, this champion motorcycle having also won the Dodge City 300-mile National Championship Race, establishing new world's marks for 100, 200 and 300 miles.

Thus the Harley-Davidson Motorcycle demonstrates its super-ability to stand up under severest conditions of strain and wear.

The Harley-Davidson has won every important long distance motorcycle race in the past four years. This means a great deal to anyone who may some day purchase a motorcycle.
